Dear Hector:

In recent years the Office of the Presidency has fallen under a shadow of distrust and cynicism.

Although this is also said about government in general, mothers no longer say as they had proverbially, that their highest hope and ambition for their sons was for them to some day be President.

This is more the reason why we should evoke the memory of great and good men who have occupied the highest office of the land.

Harry S Truman was such a man. He had the office thrust upon him at a crucial time and he assumed it manfully and did his best and is now considered great.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

Henry B. Gonzalez
