Dear Sir,

Some time ago, Mr. Jack Ryan advocated that our public school board should begin to streamline its public relations system. It appears, however, that his successor in office, Dr. William Morris, does not agree with this proposal.

It is hard to believe that a man like Dr. Morris who has served our public school system so well over the years, could be partisan to a controversy on which our community is divided. I refer, of course, to his recent public statement favoring birth control methods which Catholics still consider immoral.

The personal opinion of Dr. Morris on this matter and what he may tell his patients is one thing, but his publicly expressed opinion as president of the school board is quite another matter. He has only succeeded in offending the religious sentiments of many of his fellow citizens, who are honestly seeking a solution to this major problem.

A policy of strict neutrality is in order for the local school board on this controversial matter. I agree with his predecessor that the school board should begin working on public relations---beginning at the top.
