Charges of racism

Dr. Hector Garcia, founder of American G.I. Forum, a Hispanic veterans group, calls efforts to make English the state's official language 'racism.' The Corpus Christi resident was in Austin Monday.

S.A. Light Language bid compared to Hitler

AUSTIN (UPI) - The drive to make English the official language of Texas is comparable to Adolf Hitler's takeover of Germany in the 1930s, according to a founder of a Hispanic veterans organization.

"This is a neo-Nazi philosophy brought into Texas from outside the state," Dr. Hector P. Garcia of Corpus Christi, an official of the American G.I. Forum, said Monday.

Garcia, chairman of the group's National Archives and Historical Foundation, also told a news conference the movement - often called English First - is aimed at eliminating bilingual ballots and bilingual education and advertisements in Spanish

"What is behind this neo-Nazi philosophy?" he said. "First, it wants to create bad feelings, bad relationships, bad understanding between two groups of people of different ethnic cultures. ... It's raw racism and it will succeed in that - dividing us from our brothers."

Asked if he thought a comparison of the English First group to neo-Nazism was too strong, Garcia, 73, a World War II veteran, said:

"Well, that's what I thought when I heard Adolf Hitler start speaking during those years," he said. "It was hard for me to believe this philosophy was sold to the great majority of Germans.

"We are not against learning the language, speaking and writing it. It's a useless thing (English First). I still worry in the end we're going to wind up hating each other."

A proposed constitutional amendment that would have designated English as the state's official language died in a Texas House committee during the regular legislative session.

Eleven other states already have designated English as their official language, according to Virginia-based English First.
