Dear Dr. Garcia:

Under a grant from the National Science Foundation we are undertaking a major study of the future of the legal profession. Leaders in various fields of expertise are being asked to participate as respondents.

Would you be willing to serve as a respondent? We can offer you a $50 consultant fee for completing the four rounds of telephone responses. This will not, of course, be adequate compensation for your services, but it is meant as an honorarium.

The study will proceed with mailing to each respondent a few provocative questions. A few days later one of our staff will telephone you to ask these questions and hear your responses. These calls are designed to take no more than ten minutes and will be at times you select.

This procedure will be carried out for four rounds of questions and responses. Our object will be to develop alternative scenarios of possible futures.

This research is designed to be directly useful to policy makers in both the public and private sectors.

We hope you can participate in what should be a stimulating and significant project and that you will fill out the enclosed card and drop it in the mail to us. Letters like this one have been sent to a carefully selected group of leaders and we would appreciate your participation.

Sincerely yours,
