a Taxpayer Delinquency Account amounting to $2,600. The total revenue yield of the SSS in these three years, then, was slightly over $100,000.

THE JOINT COMMITTEE INVESTIGATION

The Joint Committee staff has examined the cases of 37 individuals about whom referrals of information were made by the SSS to either the Audit, Collection, or Intelligence Divisions. These cases included many of the prominent radicals who were active in the years 1969 to 1972 as well as several rightwingers.

The Joint Committee staff has used the same procedures and data for these individuals that it used for the White House political enemies on lists 1 and 2. In addition, the staff examined the summaries of the SSS files that the SSS prepared and sent to the Audit, Intelligence and Collection Divisions.

Clearly, the establishment of a special unit to gather and disseminate to the IRS divisions information about individuals with "extremist" political views in itself means that these individuals were selected for special attention. Some such special effort with respect to individuals who preach noncompliance with tax laws (since it is likely that they will practice it as well) may be in a somewhat different category.²

The Joint Committee staff, however, has found no evidence that individuals about whom referrals of information were made by the SSS to the Audit, Intelligence, and Collection Divisions were treated any more harshly by these divisions than was normal. Indeed, in some cases the IRS seems to have been more lenient than normal with prominent extremists, perhaps in order to avoid the charge that radicals were being persecuted.

Even though several of the individuals whose files were examined are chronic nonfilers, none have been prosecuted for their failure to file. The Collection Division does not appear to have made an inordinate effort to collect small amounts of tax, as it presumably would do if it wished to harass the individuals in question. In some cases, the IRS has not yet even attempted to collect unpaid taxes.

Since the staff has not as yet been allowed access to the files of the SSS, as indicated above, it has not completed its investigation of the treatment by the IRS of the organizations about whom referrals were made by the SSS.

² The prior administrations singled out some rightwing extremists for special attention by the IRS. This effort was on a much smaller scale than the recent investigation. Only tax-exempt organizations, not individuals, were examined, and the project was confined to only 22 such organizations.
