Dear Hector,

Many thanks for the gift of your father's book. I can hardly exaggerate the pleasure I experience in having this memento of your own past and your family's history.

I couldn't help reflecting, when you were talking about all the PhD's in Wanda's family, that one of my grandmothers (the Irish one) was a college graduate, but that the other had nothing but a high school education.

I thought your remarks yesterday were entirely appropriate, and just what I hoped you would say. You reminded the "dominant group" as you call us of some home truths we should not be allowed to forget.

I hope you feel as much satisfaction in connection with the luncheon as Janet and I feel.

Sincerely,
